Miracles Can Come From Co-operation

Sy Lubraska, of Klamath, Calif., one of the impelling forces behind the sports festival of that place and the boat races which have attracted attention all over the world, has the formula for community success in any project, and offered that formula to the Rotary club last week when he showed pictures of the race and told how that small community raised more than $10,000 each year to finance the undertaking. The act called for everyone in the community.

Such an enterprise, so he said, can "make a community." He cited a few examples of this about the country. The sports festival each year at Klamath, the Lily Festival at Brookings, both working in close co-operation, can reap more tourist trade. There must be a synchronizing of events, so that one may closely follow the other, and that each participate in the other.

Outside of the Klamath River and that boat race around which the festival is built, what has Klamath to offer the average tourist other than a little fishing? It was the untiring work and co-operation of that area which has made for it the name it now enjoys.

This city is growing more rapidly than any other place along

This city is growing moer rapidly than any other place along Highway 101, according to commercial men who "make" this territory at least once a month. This community has about everything one could want to make it beautiful, if it were always kept tidy and free from unsightly weeds, trash, brush, and debris.

Almost on the main street of town sit a couple of old cars of uncertain vintage, with wrecking work done on them. No attempt has been made in the past two or three weeks to complete the wrecking job, or to remove them from the street—yes, almost on the street where they now sit.

Those blackberries which grow in such profusion along the fences, streets and trails, should be trimmed, or destroyed, for many are becoming traffic hazards, such as the one near the laundry.

Whose job is it to remove these? Well, it may depend upon how you look at it. Property owners certainly should be held responsible if there becomes becomes a hazard from the negligence. There may be no enforcement by court action, but certainly pride should force it.

Pictures of Holy Land Were Shown

Henry Kerr, on his recent trip to Holy Land and Europe earlier this year, took along thousands of feet of movie film, and took as many pictures as the police of each country would permit, put on a 35-minute show at Rotary meeting, Tuesday noon.

Mr. Kerr, before starting the film, showed a map of the Holy Land, and sketched briefly the route of his trip, and explained reason for this certain route.

Privation among the peoples of that once-famous lands, written about in the Bible, is appalling. The mountains of Lebanon from where Solomon once harvested the famous cedars for his temple, now are almost barren wastes. The little bit of ground fertile enough for cultivation, is terraced so all of it can be used.

As a new scene appeared on the screen, Mr. Kerr would explain its significance, and a little of the history connected with the importance of this view.

Many scenes were taken of the City of Jerusalem, and the nativity of Christ. He also showed the tomb of Lazarus, whom Jesus had raised from the dead. Despite the fact that much of this land is older than the Christian religion, it is surprising how well preserved many of the buildings remain.

Mr. Kerr apologized for definite breaks in the continuity of his route, explaining that certain rolls of film which he had left for development, had not been returned. He promised that he had three
