

For What It's Worth .

By CLIFFORD P. ROWE

So far as I was aware, I had never known or seen a communist; neither had I ever been tempted by any of their propaganda. As a result I had come to be somewhat ashamed of myself, for after all if one isn't even worth a communist working on him, then he must be pretty low grade.

Such was my frame of mind until just recently when direct from the U. S. S. R. embassy in Washington, D. C., I received a beautifully illustrated magazine giving me the low-down on things behind the iron curtain. Since they won't let anyone see for himself how things are over there, I thought it was rather decent of them to take all that trouble just for me, especially when it was sent absolutely free.

After I had finished reading the magazine (in a dark corner of my cellar at midnight by candlelight) I found that they had succeeded in convincing me that they undoubtedly were biggest liars on God's green earth and that the magazine was truly worth every cent they charged me.

The stories and the words were beautiful. Everybody in Russia was employed and happy. But where the editor made his mistake was in using pictures. If those people were happy then they must have been momentarily depressed by the sight of a camera because I never saw a more miserable, dejected and beaten look on the face of human beings than that displayed by the happy Russians. The pride and joy in living, seen only on the countenances of free men, were missing entirely.

Sure I will go along with the editor when he says that everyone is employed in Russia. What does that prove? So is everyone employed in Alcatraz and Sing Sing; but I doubt very much if this is cause for happiness.

No I am afraid that Joe is wasting his comrade's rubles when he sends such tripe to me or to any other American citizen who has something other than sawdust for brains. I am not going to subscribe for the magazine even though they very kindly offered to send it in plain wrapper.

Surf Side Park

A new recreational park opened this week, when Robert and Des-sie McGugin completed beautiful "Surf Side," on ocean-side picnic ground, in the Winchuck area.

Set among giant moss-draped trees are bright colored picnic tables. There are also camp stoves and plenty of wood on the drift-littered beach. Sanitation facilities are provided.

Here one may surf-fish or may go to the nearby Winchuck, or just loaf on the sandy beach, or picnic in the shade of trees which afford protection from stiff ocean breezes at times.

Just a mile north of the State line and five miles south of Brookings on Hwy 101. Signs direct people to the spot.
