

Last Year's Parade Will Not Compare With '52 Promise

This picture shows the start of the parade last year. This year, with bands, with more entries of floats promised, there will be greater attraction for visitors to this area. Joseph Taylor said co-operation seems better as the days pass, and much may be expected this year.

For What It's Worth.

By CLIFFORD P. ROWE

As a lad I learned by a painful process that when my father told me to be home at a certain time, he meant that time and not another of my own choosing. As a result I grew up to believe that punctuality was one of desirable requirements of a good citizen. This habit has proved to be a definite liability.

An editor friend, who I respect highly, recently expressed alarm at the amount of working time wasted annually as a result of social coffee drinking. If statistics were available, I am confident that my editor friend would be even more alarmed over the amount of time lost by tardily-kept appointments. The coffee drinker has the excuse of a few minutes of relaxation; the habitually unpunctual lack even that defense.

With the trend being such as it is, I have tried off late to break myself of the bad habit of always being on time. I am doing this for the sake of my friend, and any ulcers of mine that may be in the making I find, however, that it is a losing battle.

If the date is for 7:30, I hold myself in leash, if only around the corner, until 7:45 and then dash up to the meeting place to apologize. Alas and alack, I'm always defeated. My friend, evidently aware of my strategy, casually saunters up at 8:00 to find me fuming.

If a group of friends plan a social evening, the good lady and I deliberately remain at home for at least a half hour after the appointed time for gathering. Even then we are almost invariably greeted by our host, his face half covered with shaving lather, who ushers us into a guestless house with "Well, well, here already, eh?"

Punctuality is coming to be the curse of my life; it's a hopeless situation. My own consolation is that occasionally I forget that I even have an appointment and fail to make any appearance at all. On these occasions I manage to salvage some of the time previously wasted.

Along Azalea Row

By Martha Grayshel

This month the Garden club meeting will be held at the picnic ground at the Azalea State Park, Thursday, July 10, at one o'clock. The second Thursday of each month is the regular meeting date of the club. Cards have been sent out to all members reminding them that this will be a pot luck luncheon, and we believe it is well understood by all that guests are always welcome.

Those who have heard Luther Tisdale talk to the club will know that there is a treat in store for them at the coming meeting when Mr. Tisdale will give us an informal talk on the trees and the shrubs of Azalea State Park.

Since this is Lily Blossom Week, the Garden Club ladies have been requested to bring a table arrangement featuring Croft lilies stressing line. Ruth Bathiany, the hostess chairman, and her two helpers, Mrs. Drobaugh and Mrs. Behee, will see that the tables in the park are covered and that coffee and tea are ready to serve at one o'clock.

Plans for the Garden Club float, in the lily parade this year, are still in the embryonic stage what with no float chairman, and Mrs. Erskine Miller giving full time "trained nurse" care of her husband. But by Thursday's meeting we should know whether we are going to build the float in Mrs. Wollam's yard or over at Struebing's place, and just whose truck bed we are going to be allowed to use and the exact theme for the float. Helpers to decorate the float will be readily available as a number of ladies, both members have expressed a desire to be of service, so as soon as the preliminaries are set up it will be a lot of fun to see the project develop, and whether we win a prize or not, at least we will have something representative of the Garden Club.

Mrs. Ira Brown was elected vice-president of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Eagles at the last regular meeting. Plans were made for organizing a drill team. A social hour, with refreshments, followed the mens and ladies meetings.

A party which included Mr. and Mrs. Roy Becker, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Mathews, Mr. and Mrs. Will McVay, Mr. and Mrs. Jewell Kohler and Mr. and Mrs. Leahy of Medford, picnicked at Surf Side Park, over the Fourth.

Mrs. Nettie Harris of San Martin, Calif., is a guest of her sister at Harbor.

Miss Joan Byrne returned home Friday, from an airplane trip to West Virginia where she represented her sorority, and en route home visited relatives in Michigan.

Robert McGugin, manager of Surf Side Park, reports crowds of picnickers over the Fourth weekend. Tables were at a premium, and improvised tables on the beach were used. Surf fishing and bathing were enjoyed by many. People were here from Medford, Grants Pass and a few from out-of-state.
