For What It's Worth.

By CLIFFORD P. ROWE

Reluctantly I must admit that the Democratic party made its wisest possible choice of presidential candidate. Although no one except the professionals know exactly why or how he was selected, some feel that it was a move to unite the north and south; many more, however, feel that he was held to be the most acceptable by the long ruling party machine bosses.

Regardless of motive, the end result was the best the Democrats could have ever hoped to achieve. Granting that many issues face the major parties in this fall's campaign, the record of corruption which has marked the Truman administration will without doubt be the deciding factor in November.

Stevenson, of all the Democratic candidates, was the only one who in the public's mind was not linked in some way with the current administration. Thus while the Republicans may shout "corruption," the Illinois governor can honestly say, "You are not talking about me; you can't hold me responsible for what Truman did." To be truthful there is little that can be held against Stevenson personally—in fact, comparatively few know of him at all which will be a decided asset for him as a Democratic candidate.

Thus by the picking of Stevenson, the Democratic party admitted that the present administration had lost all chance of ever again being elected. In desperation it chose as its leader one who had never had the opportunity of being contaminated by being a fellow traveler of the doomed Trumanites.

So come November, the Democrats will hope to convince the voting public that a new driver means a straighter route of travel. They also will hope with equal fervor that this same public can somehow be made to forget that the back seat drivers for the past six years will still be calling the turns.

I once had a friend who hated to take a bath; he endeavored to neutralize the stench with sweet perfumes. I am afraid the Democrats are employing the same technique.

On the Main Drag

Those life-like animals voices in a can—plaguing Rotary.

Those "uke" students getting in the groove. How OSC will suffer this fall.

Alertness pays off on these big city street crossings.

Moving day for the "city dads" Monday.

An epidemic of fish fever for which there has never been found a suitable cure.

Ed Dempsey on speaking terms with his typewriter—but good.

Genuine sympathy for our brethren when they need it.

C. O. Leonard feeling foxy.

Bob Williamson getting muscular.

Karl Ostberg having to lie down in the bottom with his mammoth salmon and come back to terra firma after catching seven.

How about entering that hobby as an exhibit at the county fair?

Hayride Billed By Youth Group, Fri.

The Youth Group, composed of boys and girls, 13 to 19 years, inclusive, have planned a hayride to Bruce Hole on the Chetco, for Friday night, Aug. 8.

At the hole there will be a big bonfire and swim. Hay will be furnished by Don Crockett who, with Wilson Freeman, will furnish truck transportation.

The group also hopes that all parents will generously patronize the food sale which will be held at Freeman's Chetco Store, Saturday, Aug. 9, beginning at 10:00 in the morning, soon after the food is brought there.

The group is also planning a formal dance with Eddie DesJardin furnishing the music.
