Curry County Fair Arouses 'Interest'

A good deal of practice and planning is going on in the ranks of the Chetco Wranglers this week and next to be ready for their participation in the Curry County Fair, August 22, 23 and 24 at Gold Beach.

The group is gathering at the Morris Ranch up the Chetco on Sundays for rehearsal. Ed Thornton hopes the horses will co-operate in putting on a pleasing show before the grandstand.

He also reminds residents of this end of the county to have their entries in by 10 a. m. on Friday, August 22, to receive credit toward election of the local princess, Pat Hyland as fair queen.

Roy Brimm is gathering participants for the logging jubilee and promises fun and entertainment for everyone.

Wild Senna

Wild Senna is a tall, handsome plant which thrives in the eastern half of the United States. It is found all the way from New England south to Florida, and west to Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and Louisiana.

Throughout this broad region,

©1951 National Wildlife Federation
Wild Senna

Wild Senna grows in moist, rich soil. It often sinks its roots in the soggy ground of swamps, and sometimes it stands along protected roadsides.

A big plant, it hardly ever measures less than three feet in height. Under the best condition it may stretch up and up until it is between five and eight feet tall.

By the middle of the summer, the National Wildlife Federation says, Wild Senna is ready to put forth attractive blossoms. These flowers are bright golden yellow, and they grow in thick clusters which are attached at the upper parts of the plants.

Each of the many blossoms is small—only about three-fourths of an inch across. But when a number of these open up together, they make a colorful display in July and August.

Following the blossoms, the plant produces its seed pods. The pods are flat, slender and curved. They are between three and four inches long, and have a hairy surface.

Unlike the fuzzy pods, Wild Senna's leaves are smooth to the touch. The leaves, branching out from the main stem, are dark green on top and pale underneath. Each leaf is made up of 12 to 18 lance-shaped leaflets.

Both the leaves and the pods have been used for many years in the making of medicines. This was first done in Africa and the East Indies, where certain varieties of senna grow. Later it was discovered that the leaves and pods of the American Wild Senna also had medical value.

While this is still true, the plant is chiefly looked upon as one of our most attractive wild flowers. It grows quickly and easily in its favorite spots, but does not spread and become an unwanted pest. Many a piece of ground is brighter because Wild Senna is growing there.

Mrs. Rosalie Kelleher is spending a few days here, visiting old-time friends. It may be recalled that she and her son, Jerry, lived for many months at the Shigler Apartments. Now living at Santa Rosa, she was accompanied by friends.

Dr. and Mrs. Phillip Skell, recently of Portland, are visitors at the Almo Newton home in Harbor this week. Dr. Skell as accepted a chair as professor of chemistry in a Pennsylvania college.
