Out Of the Woods

A thirteen-year-old second class Boy Scout has given the rest of us an example of cool-headed courage. Brent Bradberry, lost for seven days in the high Sierras, remembered the woodsman's rule that water runs down hill and that following streams leads to safety. He plodded through brushy canyons, confident in himself and ignorant of the forces at work to find him. "Oh, you know who I am?" he asked in surprise when he met the first searchers.

His only food was a few pine nuts and dried apricots: "I figured I could survive anywhere; I was worried mainly whether my mother would be hunting for me." The machinery of civilization was hunting for him: bloodhounds and rangers and airplanes, but Brent came out on his own. Brent is too young to qualify for an Explorer Scout—an Explorer Scout must be fourteen. But a lot of older and supposedly wiser people, lost in deeper woods than was a good year for walnuts. Some of the largest walnuts grown in California come from this ranch, some of them being six inches in circumference.

Mr and Mrs. William Westbrook have returned to their home following their trip during the holiday season with the latter's mother and other relatives at Milbrae, Calif., and other interesting places.

Mr. and Mrs. Perez recently purchased five acres of land near the Mr. and Mrs. Davy Crockett property close to Harbor. The parents of Mr. Perez have been doing extensive improvements on the interior and exterior of the building and will be a modern home when finished. They plan to move into their new home soon.

Funeral services were held on Jan. 4 for Dewey Billie, 60, from Wier's mortuary chapel. Rev. James Shelton officiated. Interment was in Smith River Indian cemetery under direction of Smith River American Legion Post.

Mrs. Emma Cooper, who spent several weeks in the Seaside hospital under treatment for an injured hip, is recovering satisfactorily and can take a few steps now. She returned home and will be cared for by her son, John.
