Alexander Lake Tells Students About Africa

Alexander Lake, Pelican Bay resident and African big game hunter Monday told the Brookings-Harbor high school student body of his adventures in Africa.

Because Mr. Lake is a naturalist as well as a hunter, the book has been used by a number of schools as a textbook, and it has been translated into four languages.

Mr. Lake told the students that a better living could be made writing of his adventures in Africa than living them, and he cautioned them that it isn't all as glamorous as it sounds.

In fact, he worried a little about whether some of his audience might take the next boat to Africa, and he warned them they should have adequate information on the continent before they tried it. As the best source of such information, he named W. N. Martin, professor of biology, State Teachers College, East Stroudsberg, Pennsylvania, and told potential big-game hunters to write the professor before they embarked.
