An Incident on the Rogue River

(Note: This true incident occurred during a period of high water in the winter of 1915-16, while the writer was teaching in Wedderburn. The ferryman was Mr. Wm. Caughell, who still resides there.)

By DELLA WILSON NICHOLS

The waters of the River Rogue
Were red and surging high;
Upon its crest great spreading trees,
With upturned roots swept by.

The rolling ocean calling loud
Showed green and white close by,
Where billows broke on rocky shore,
With salt spray dashing high.

No boat was safe upon that stream
With such a running tide,
When duty called the ferryman
Across the river wide.

He knew the changes of the Rogue,
And knew the dangers, too.
But safe and sure he made his way
In his trim boat so true.

Just then around the distant bend
A craft swung into view—
A little boat with engine stilled,
Oars gone and anchor, too.

And in that boat, all undismayed,
Were two men and their wives,
Who heeded not the rushing tide,
Nor danger to their lives.

But swift they flew past town and isle,
And swifter yet, they sped—
Still trusting to their engine old—
The breakers just ahead!

The anxious watchers on the wharf
Looked on with dimming sight,
For well they knew no one from there
Could reach them in their plight.

Just then from o'er the turbid stream,
A boat was seen to glide,
The ferryman in quick pursuit
Was racing with the tide!

The yawning billows in his course,
The driftwood floating free,
The rasping wind full in his face,
Beyond the raging sea!

But riding still the current swift
That bore him toward the main,
He gazed upon the hapless boat,
Oh, would the race be vain?

His engine throbbing strong and free
Across the reckless waves,
A steady hand is at the wheel,
Beyond the ocean caves.

He gains! he gains! he nears the boat,
And throws the life-line wide,
And with the strength God gave him, then,
He saved them from the tide.

Thanks be to men so brave as he,
That act when dangers rise,
With ne'er a thought of pay nor self,
To help, the only prize.

At this immortal hour, all human hate, pride, greed, lust should bow and declare Christ's power, and the reign of Truth and Life divine should make man's being pure and blest. —Mary Baker Eddy

Look not mournfully to the past—it comes not back again; wisely improve the present—it is thine; go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly heart. —Longfellow
