created by these people. Their work would attract others, which would result in some type of yearly (or monthly) exhibitions.

This bit of "idealistic" thinking could very readily become realistic with some honest effort on the part of a group really interested. I am. You deserve all the good and so be a bit atient Brookings. I pledge my efforts to the cause.

We received a bit of biting poetry. We have our hunches on who the author is. It seems to have a bit of the law trained outlook in its approach to the "facts". You may see the tadpoles turn to frogs.

The fir trees turn to logs, You may see the ocean's green turn grey, The sinner mend his way, You may see some water turn to gas.

The mountains turn to bogs, You may see some gridiron upsets come, And fond Hopes go astray, But when the Big Ten "Champ" Is crowned,

And answers to the call, You won't see old Wisconsin In the Rose Bowl game this fall.

You may let your fleeting fancies Lead you on to Illinois, You may casually permit your eyes To rest on Michigan State, You may reserve a few kind thoughts

For Iowa's busting boys, Or it may be Indiana Who comes knocking at the gate, But when the L. A. train pulls out And leaves its depot stall, It won't be old Wisconsin That's aboard the train this fall.

So sing your "Alma Mammy" songs, Aye, sing them more and more, Build up your hopes and wave your flags, And banish every fear, Recall those pleasant memories, Beside Mendota's shore, Pay homage to the Badger team Throughout the waning year. But, please, don't let this get you down Or bother you at all, For it won't be old Wisconsin In the Rose Bowl game this fall. —Anonymous.
