Given Freedom
127,000 Steelhead

Steelhead liberations from Oregon fish commission hatcheries so far this year total approximately 127,000 fish, Irvine French, commission director of fish culture, announced this week. During March, French stated, 17,000 steelhead averaging seven inches in length were released into Big Creek, a Columbia river tributary near Astoria. The fish were reared at the Big Creek salmon hatchery. Another 80,000 of the young sea-going rainbows went into the Sandy river system from the Sandy river hatchery during March and April. This group of fish averaged six inches in length.

There are still 1,374,000 steelhead fingerlings on hand at six fish commission hatcheries throughout the state, French said most of these fingerlings are being held until they attain a larger size, but would probably be liberated within the next two months.
