Drive To Arrive Alive Is Slogan

"Drive to Arrive Alive." There's a lot of good common sense packed into that short, catchy slogan the Chetco Grange No. 765 and the National Safety Council are using for their vacation driving program this month. After all, when a driver starts out on a motor trip his goal is to get where he is going and to get there healthy and happy so that he can have some fun. It would certainly defeat his purpose if careless driving necessitated a detour to the hospital—or worse!

What kind of driving then, should he adopt to get him to his destination alive—and in good health and spirits?

To begin with, it should be courteous driving. The courteous driver is pleasantly relaxed, gives other drivers a break and is always prepared to yield the right of way to prevent accidents. His behavior is in sharp contrast to that of the selfish Hurry Bug who drives along the road with no thought for others. The Hurry Bug is intent on getting to his destination—and heaven help anyone who gets in his way. Don't be a Hurry Bug, make courtesy your code of the road! Another characteristic of the kind of driving we're talking about is that it's law abiding driving. The intelligent driver knows that in order to stay safe he must stay within the law. He familiarizes himself with the laws of the area through which he intends to drive, and when he drives through that area he OBEYS the laws.

The third major consideration is that driving should be geared to conditions. A motorist should always drive at a speed that's safe for prevailing conditions—conditions of weather, the road, the car, and his own physical and mental state. If he's smart, a driver knows that any adverse condition calls for application of the rule: "SLOW DOWN AND LIVE!"

That about sums up the message contained in the July slogan, "DRIVE TO ARRIVE ALIVE!" Unfortunately, many motorists will probably consider themselves too smart to follow its advice. To their sorrow they may arrive in a badly battered condition—or they may not arrive at all. DON'T LET THIS HAPPEN TO YOU!

STATE FAIR TO BE SEPTEMBER 3-10

More space for exhibits and more prize money will be featured in the Foods Department of the 1955 Oregon State Fair, which will be held from September 3-10 at Salem.

Slightly cramped for space last year, when Oregon housewives deluged the department with over 1,000 exhibits in their quest of the coveted "Queen of the Kitchen" title, the foods display definitely will be enlarged for the '55 State Fair.

No entry fees are charged in the foods department competition which is open to all Oregon residents. A complete list of foods which may be entered is listed in the state fair premium list, available now from the state fair office, Salem.

FOR WHAT IT'S WORTH

By CLIFFORD ROWE

There used to be an old saying that went something to the effect that one never missed the water until the well went dry. A more modern version might be that one never appreciates the offspring until they are no longer around.

All of the foregoing is merely a sneaky way of introducing the information that our family has shrunk by one for the remainder of the summer. In other words, to quit beating about the bush the son and heir has taken his first job away from home and things just aren't the same around here anymore.

Really I don't know why I should miss him. When he was here, I never saw him except at meal times or when he stayed at home long enough to argue me into letting him have the car for a Saturday night date. I suppose I miss most his waking me up in the middle of the night as he tiptoed past my room on the way to his bed upstairs and then waiting to hear him drop his shoes one by one on the floor of his room and the ceiling of mine.

I do know that I am now definitely having trouble getting used to the idea of being able to sleep straight through the night without being disturbed.

But all joking aside, home isn't the same with the rascal gone. When I saw him off on the bus for Sisters, Oregon, where he is going to work for the forest service, and in parting said "Good-bye, son, I'll see you next fall," I found it kind of tough to act the part of a father encouraging his son to get out into the world to learn to stand on his own feet.

I guess that was because it seems only yesterday that he was learning to take his first steps and I was hovering in the background, prepared to catch him if he wavered so that he wouldn't get a nasty bump in the fall.

Somehow I feel that such is the case for most of us Dads. For eighteen years, we are continually prodding our youngsters to grow up to be men; and at the same time we are constantly on the alert to keep them from suffering more than their share of bruises.

And then before we know it, almost overnight, the son becomes a man and our job is done. And while we're mighty proud—we are also just a bit lonely.
