Oregon Fish Stocking is High

Although the hunting season preparations have stolen the limelight among Oregon's sportsmen, fishing devotees are still getting in some good licks in the lakes, streams, and reservoirs of the state.

Adding substantially to the angler's catch have been trout, steelhead, and salmon released from the Oregon Game Commission fish hatcheries. As to date, approximately 2,500,000 legal sized fish have been stocked in fishing waters throughout the state, with another 500,000 yearlings yet to be planted. Angler creel census has shown that hatchery released legals have made up a goodly portion of the catch.

In addition to releases of legal sized fish, hatcheries have kept well ahead of schedule with the stocking of fry and fingerlings into the reservoirs and lake basin groups. Most allocations for lakes and reservoirs at the lower elevations have already been completed, with mobile units now making releases in waters at the higher elevations previously that were blocked by snow.

Although no records are yet available as to the number of fry and fingerlings stocked to date, approximately 10,000,000 are scheduled to be released before the summer ends.

Aerial planting of the high lake basin groups in the Willowa and Cascade mountains will get underway about the eighth of August.

Chamber of C. Has Thursday Meeting

The Brookings Chamber of Commerce met Thursday noon at their regular monthly luncheon. A report was made by highway chairman Ed Dempsey on the possibilities of a road to Grants Pass. He told of the mining possibilities in the back country.

Gordon Olsen, membership chairman, gave a report which will kick off a new drive for members.

President Charles Grayskel told of the things the Chamber has accomplished in the past, such as street lights, work on the highway south of Brookings, help with the city incorporation, re-organization of Azalea Festival, 2 printings of Brookings folder, information bureau and working conditions.
