New Speed Laws In Effect Here

Mae Smith, City of Brookings Recorder, has received notice from the Oregon Speed Control Board that the new speed regulations will be in effect in Brookings, on the Oregon Coast Highway.

The new limits won't vary too much from the old ones, however. The city had written to the board asking that the limits be lowered within the city

Letter to Editor

It has been interesting to watch your paper keep pace with the growth of the city since we limits.

The new rules state that traffic from Ransom Avenue west to Pacific will be 35 miles per hour. From Pacific to east of Oak Street the limit will be 25, instead of 30, and from Oak to the bridge city limits 40 miles an hour.

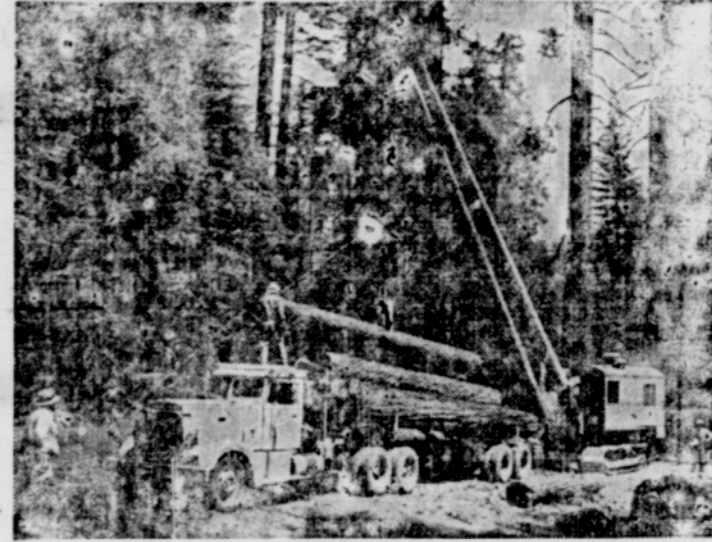

were there last. Both have become more impressive. We especially notice your optimistic reports of proposed and actual progress in the Brookings area, and the pictures that go with them will help us recognize our home town when we get back there.

NATIONAL FOREST TIMBER SALE OPERATION

Last year, cash receipts to the U. S. Treasury from sales of national forest timber exceeded $65,000,000. This is quite an increase when compared with the $85,000 collected from the sale of timber in 1905, the year the Forest Service was organized in the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Twenty-five percent of all money taken in by the Forest Service—not only for timber but for any use—goes back to the States in which the national forests are located. That money is turned over to the counties for public schools and public roads.

The national forests, which contain 76 million acres of land classed as commercial forest, are the largest single supplier of raw material for the Nation's forest products industries. Last year the Forest Service made 24,000 separate timber sales to individuals and companies for a total cut of 5.3 billion board feet, about 10 percent of all the timber used in the United States.

National forest timber lands are managed so as to produce perpetual crops of wood. Timber is marked or designated for cutting to encourage reproduction, maintain and improve the growing stock and still safeguard watershed and recreational values. As the Forest Service marks its Golden Anniversary, it pays tribute to the many states, individuals and companies who also are managing their timber lands to produce perpetual supplies of wood for generations to come.
