UPPER CHETCO NEWS

Mrs. Frank Waldien
Everyone is happy to hear the busy hum of gravel trucks up the ridge. The road was getting almost impassable because of the rains and freezes, and the log trucks broke through the soft spot. This repair work resulted from a meeting held, Friday night, in the schoolhouse where the most interested persons met and decided to throw in together with the result that men, trucks and equipment were put to work and, with everyone helping as they could, we now have a much better road.

Mrs. Walter Bailey tells us her baby has the three-day measles.
Mr. and Mrs. John Eldridge have sold their house and some acreage and the new owners will soon be taking over.

EDITORS' NOTE

We have heard several complaints of the molestation of live stock, both in the Pistol River and the Chetco county. This is a serious crime and may be met with drastic and permanent cures from which there may be no recourse on the part of the miscreant.

The Upper Chetco Bridge has been under water since November 13th.

NATIONAL FORESTS REALM OF THE WILD

Sport on one of the national forests which contain 81,000 miles of fishing streams and 2 1/4 million acres of natural and artificial lakes. These public forests also furnish food and shelter for nearly one-third of all the big-game animals in the United States and for many, many thousands of fur bearers, game birds and waterfowl. They are truly a Realm of the Wild.
With the exception of a few game preserves, all 181,000,000 acres of national forests are open to hunting and fishing under the fish and game laws of the states in which they are located. Last year, over 10,000,000 visits were made by fishermen and hunters from every state in the Union to enjoy their favorite sports in these forests.
Wildlife is a renewable resource just like grass and trees. Accordingly, the Forest Service works closely with the state fish and game departments to provide better fishing and hunting for the many people who love these outdoor sports. As America's population increases and working hours become shorter there will be ever greater demand for hunting and fishing on the national forests.
In marking the 50th Anniversary of its establishment by the American people, the Forest Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture urges every American to take a greater interest in the protection, development and wise use of the national forests which belong to all the people.
