This Tuesday being Valentines Day, there will no doubt be a deluge of mail for me from the many female admirers. Girls, please mark all cards "personal". There are a couple of gents around this office that will latch on to any mail from the opposite sex, and there is no telling when you can pry them free from it.

— Sketch Book —

I have already received one card, an original at that, from a secret pal. For a minute I thought it was from "Olga." Ollie was the star center on our third grade basketball team. Being six-three was a real asset. Our team that year was undefeated.

That gal was really an athlete. She was a terrific first baseman and a heck of an end on the football team. After her tour of duty at public school 31, she had many offers to turn professional. I think she is still travelling with a troupe.

— Sketch Book —

How the Quarterback Club here would welcome an athlete of Olga's stature. But, those boys haven't been sitting on their hands these last couple of weeks either. They haven't bought off any professional players but have started well on their way towards the $5,000 goal.

— Sketch Book —

As quickly as the rainy season for the year passed I wrote the kinfolk back in Wisconsin way about the fine sunshine. I have been noticing the temperatures back there are near 10 and 15 degree mark. Only Florida has shown any mild temperatures compared to Brookings. Today I received a card from one of the brothers postmarked Florida. I think I talked him into a sunnier climate but he travelled in the wrong direction.

Dan Styers tells me the reason for him bowling games just barely over the 100 mark is that his bowling shoes were in someone else's car. Can anyone explain that further?
