Modern Techniques Help When Building in Winter
— from SMALL HOMES GUIDE

Winter need no longer be the deep freeze for your building plans, with modern construction techniques minimizing weather's effect, Small Homes Guide notes. Certain precautions will make a house built in winter just as good as one built in ideal weather. This may hurry the proud moment when you get those shiny new house keys.
Trenchers and excavating machines bite through frozen ground easily; straw and portable heaters protect concrete from freezing, let masons work despite the cold; panel construction and use of preassembled roof trusses speed erection of the house shell, closing in the structure so work may progress indoors.
Contractors and tradesmen alike make every effort to keep working in winter; you benefit—work that is year-around is cheaper than that which is seasonal.

Portable heaters provide comfort for masons, who often use canvass shelters.
