NOWHERE A FINER CLIMATE . . .

Tuesday morning little white pellets commonly known as hail came flying down from the heavens. On Monday several people reported to this office as a news item that they had seen snow. And perhaps on Friday we may get a little rain in Brookings—an inch or so.

However, I haven't heard a single complaint. Everybody is quite pleased with the wonderful fall and the winter thus far. More than two of what would be normally our worst months have passed—November and December, and still the sun comes out and makes an honest newspaper of us.

If you will note—on our masthead—it says right there for all to see, "Nowhere a finer Climate—Nowhere a finer Community." We think that we're telling the truth on both scores. Last year at times we will grant that we had an occasional doubt flicker across our mind when it rained incessantly for weeks on end. But we are now convinced that was the exception rather than the rule.

We had a marvelous summer, without a drop of rain for months and months. We had a glorious fall, with just enough rain to keep the dust down—and now our winter thus far has been excellent, except for a few days.

We can easily see by looking at the weather reports that Brookings is the warmest spot during the winter of any place in the entire Pacific Northwest—and it is one of the coolest spots during the summer. We can't ask anything more out of weather than that.

We repeat our masthead motto with vigor, "Nowhere a Finer Climate—Nowhere a Finer Community."

For What Its Worth By Clifford P. Rowe

During the past Christmas season, it was my good fortune to enjoy the most satisfying vacation of my life. While customary on the part of most people to look forward to such events during the summer months, I, myself, find that due primarily to my being allergic to the popular conception of a vacation the winter months give me the better insurance for genuine leisure.

In the first place, the members of my family do not have the inclination to travel during those months which cannot guarantee good weather. This means that the Yuletide holidays give me my best opportunity to put into practice my own philosophy as to what should constitute a vacation. Rather than offering myself up as a potential statistic for holiday traffic fatalities, I concentrate all of my efforts into the enjoyable task of loafing—at home.

At first it was a little difficult to break away from routine. My natural inclination each morning was to dress in an appropriate manner to meet my classes at college; but before two days had passed, I found that I could clothe myself sloppily, even foregoing a necktie, without feeling too uncomfortable.

My next step in emancipation was to do exactly what I felt like doing exactly when I felt like doing it. If I had the urge to read, I took a book from the shelf, ensconced myself in an easy chair, and within a few minutes was out of this world. If I felt like eating, I raided the refrigerator; and best of all, if I felt like doing absolutely nothing, I proceeded to do just that.

Perhaps for the first time in my life I realized the cruelty of a schedule as a taskmaster. My greatest satisfaction came from the realization that I could throw off the shackles of rigid procedure without feeling ill at ease in the process. I am convinced that the inability to relax comfortably is the curse of the modern world.

Now that I am returned to my daily chores, I find myself refreshed and at the same time a trifle conceited over having at last discovered the true meaning of the much abused word—vacation.
