Gold Beach to Brookings in 1957? Chapman to Propose Plan to Holmes

As the third week of the 1957 legislative session draws to a close in Oregon's capitol city, all observers are impressed with the progress that has been made in this short space of time. With the prolonged battle for the Presidency of the Senate finally climaxed with the election of Senator Boyd Overhulse of Madras, the Senate settled down to serious work in an effort to catch up on the lost time caused by the controversy over a leader. At the end of the week, there has been thirty-odd bills introduced for Senate consideration. I introduced one more on Monday, which was a bill pertaining to lien laws, in addition to the five I had introduced on Friday previously. A most interesting thing to me was that on this same morning, the Oregonian came out with a nice long editorial relative to the injustice caused by the backlog of cases the Supreme Court has and the long waiting period required for a case to be heard after it has been submitted, which is just exactly what my bill that I had introduced last Friday, was attempting to remedy.

The House, with a head start on organization, now has over three hundred bills for consideration of the members of that body. It might be pointed out that normally the Oregon legislature considers something like fifteen hundred individual measures bearing on all phases of state government. Oregonians might further be interested to know that the California legislature has just adjourned until March 4th, when they will again assemble in Sacramento to consider somewhere in the neighborhood of 4,000 bills which have already been placed in the hopper. The above figures on Oregon and California should serve to give everyone a general idea of the complexity of government in this machine age.

The early introduction of so many bills in Oregon can be explained by the fact that all revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. This means that all bills relating to taxation and appropriation of state funds must originate with that body. With taxes and taxation the most important single issue to face the legislature in 1957, it is readily apparent that many suggestions have come forth in bill form on the general and specific subject of taxation. Coupled with the early introduction of Ways and Means bills which deal with funds appropriated to run the various departments of the state, the greater majority of House bills deal with one or the other of these subjects.

On the general subject of legislation it should be pointed out that in addition to taxes involving money, there are literally hundreds of bills brought before the legislature on a variety of subjects that is constantly amazing to freshman legislators as well as old timers. A reading of the Weekly Cumulative Index to Legislative Measures, which is published each Monday, discloses that already there are a wide variety of measures proposed covering practically every field of human endeavor and undertaking; and this list is sure to grow with each passing day. These subjects cover such wide fields as Predatory Animals, the crime of embezzlement by bailee, milk dealers, hospital care associations, narcotics, public bonds, etc.

Citing this only limited list of subjects which are brought before members of the legislature only emphasizes that it is difficult for any legislator to keep abreast of all measures which he and his colleagues must consider. It is literal impossibility for each legislator to be an expert on each and every subject and it is for this reason that I welcome expressions from the folks back home when matters affect their interests. When the newspaper carries notice of a bill introduced into the legislature which is of interest to you, I certainly welcome your advice and experience as a means of aiding me in making up my mind.

On Tuesday of this week I had an audience with Dutch Williams, Senator Andrew Naterlin of Newport, Rep. Carl Back and Mr. Verne Ayres, Coast Association President. Mr. Ayres assured us that $1,400,000 has already been appropriated for the "cow path" between Gold Beach and Brookings. $400,000 will probably finish the four-lane highway four miles south of Gold Beach to Hunter's Creek and the additional $1,000,000 is to be used to improve the highway as far as possible. We also tentatively worked out another proposition which we will present to Governor Holmes, that might supply funds to complete the highway from Gold Beach to Brookings within the year.

Visitors to the Senate Wednesday were Mayor Hartley and City Administrator Bob Herrington of North Bend.

Two well attended public hearings of the past week brought forth the conflicting views of proponents and opponents of controversial matters. On Wednesday evening the House Taxation Committee held a public hearing for informational purposes of the members of the committee and the general public. At this meeting, Mr. Robert Hall of the Portland Chamber of Commerce explained his theories of taxation, followed by a similar discussion of George Brown of the AFL-CIO. Similar hearings are planned by this committee at later dates to allow the varying theories of taxation to be thoroughly aired before concrete proposals are offered which will finance state government in the next biennium.

State Bank Debts Show Increase

Oregon bank debts, reported for December, showed an increase not only over the previous month, November, of this year, but also over December of a year ago.

The 164 banks reporting in the state showed an increase in bank debts of 8 per cent from December, 1955 and a 3.1 per cent increase from November, 1956. Total bank debts for the state were $1,707,114,634.

Bank debts, collected monthly by the university's bureau of business research, are regarded as good indicators of current business activity. Debts represent the dollar value of checks drawn against deposit accounts of individuals and business firms.

Bank debts for December in the Douglas, Coos and Curry county area were down 6.0 per cent from December of last year and showed a decrease of 9 per cent from November, 1956. Total bank debts, reported by 10 banks in the area are $49,212,581.
