China is Potential Northwest Market

Resumption of trade with China could have many diverse effects on Northwest markets.

Ten years ago the United States shipped nearly $200,000,000 worth of farm products to China. Among these were wheat, flour and other grain products; canned and dried milk, and some fruit and vegetable products from the Northwest.

Last year, and the five preceding years, no farm products have gone from this country to the mainland of China—at least not directly.

Our shipments of ten years ago, although financed to a considerable extent by our foreign aid fund, do give some idea of the possible size of the Chinese market. Yet this market might become much larger if the Chinese are successful in their current efforts to increase industrial production, raising income. Even then, the old problem of earning dollars might remain until they produced something that we could buy to advantage.

At one time, China offered walnuts and eggs in this country. This was very upsetting to markets here Chinese hooked rugs were liked by American homemakers, but cut into the sales of domestic rug manufacturers.

No one knows what goods China might offer or want from us in the future, but it is quite apparent that any change in our policies toward China could bring many and varied changes in our markets.

Trade with China might help clear away the cloud of concern that has been hanging over Northwest wheat producers in recent years. This cloud has already been partially lifted by increased sales in other parts of the Orient, especially in Japan and India. At one time China took nearly 9,000,000 bushels of our wheat; part of this was in the form of flour milled in the Northwest.

But would trade bring additional difficulties to poultry men, nut growers and other already hard pressed? That's among the questions which would have to be answered in any consideration of reopening trade relationships.

stances.

—d. Acknowledge that Peiping is the effective government of China but avoid full diplomatic relations.

—e. Other

3. In view of possible future Red Chinese threats in Far East, the U. S. should:

—a. Withdraw U. S. troops and bases from Far East to avoid war with Red China.

—b. Build up strength in Far East.

—c. Offer aid to free nations in Far East to meet Red Chinese threats.

—d. Offer to help only those Asian nations which join in mutual security pact with U. S.

—e. Cut off U. S. aid to any country trading with Red China.

—f. Negotiate with Red China for a Far East settlement.

—g. Other

4. In our relations with Taiwan the U. S. should:

—a. Continue to recognize Kuomintang as legal government of China and help them (short of U. S. troops) to regain main land.

—b. ReRecognize Kuomintang as legal government of Taiwan but not China.

—c. Withdraw recognition from Kuomintang and recognize Peiping's claim to Taiwan.

—d. Support Taiwanese independence from both Kuomintang and Communists.

—e. Offer to recognize Peiping if it will accept independent Taiwan under the Kuomintang.

—f. Other

(Check statements you agree with or add your own)

1. On Peiping's bid for China's seat in the UN the U. S. should:

—a. Continue to keep Peiping off Security Council, even by using veto.

—b. Use economic pressure on other UN members to keep Peiping out of General Assembly.

—c. Use diplomatic pressure to keep Peiping out of UN but if we lose bow to will of majority.

—d. If Peiping gets in UN, U. S. should walk out.

—e. Withdraw all opposition to UN seat for Peiping.

—f. Other

2. On diplomatic recognition of Red Chinese government, the U. S. should:

a. Recognize Peiping now.

—b. If progress is made, be willing to grant recognition at some future date.

c. Refuse to recognize Red China under any circum-
