Lumber Prices Still Up Some

The slight improvement in prices for green lumber reported last week still continues, but the market is still handicapped by lack of demand, according to Random Lengths, Eugene weekly lumber market letter.

Although mills are holding to their new price levels, and report some selling, it is still unlikely that current inventories and production can be moved entirely.

Even if demand were to pick up sharply, most mills feel it would be some time before any price advances would be felt at the mill level.

Stud prices continue to show firmness, largely due to low volume production.

Continuing buyer interest has been reported by mills shipping mixed cars of green and kiln dried lumber, but some report a slight slowdown from two weeks ago as buyers wait for definite market trends to develop. Most sales are made to fill immediate needs or gaps in unbalanced inventories.

Although Pine production is below par, most mills have been selling their output, and maintain fair unfilled order files. For the past several months, sales have exceeded production, and prices, particularly in the wider widths of Number 2 and better and 3 grades have shown considerable strength.

Associated species of Pine have not fared so well. Inland Fir and larch production is handicapped by adverse weather, and an inactive market. Englemann Spruce remains unchanged with a slow and spotty market, and White Fir follows the same pattern.

Demand and supply in the Plywood market is fairly well balanced as a result of curtailed production. A number of plants reported a pick-up in inquiry this past week, but so far none of those who shortened their working weeks to four days, have indicated they will resume normal schedules.
