FOR WHAT IT'S WORTH

By CLIFFORD P. ROWE

Until just recently I had been firmly convinced that never again would I be compelled to undergo the stress and strain reserved for those intimately related to a "blessed event". Just goes to show how much faith one should put into such an assumption; for during the entire first week of June I experienced all the pangs of an expectant father as I waited patiently for a newly planted yard to give off its first green blush of existence.

True, there were no odd cravings on the part of the lawn to drive me to distraction. At least, there was none of which I was made aware. All it demanded was water, water, and more water. Naturally, it was to be expected that all of the prayers I had offered in past years for warm weather should be answered simultaneously immediately the seed had been scattered.

For seven long, long days (it takes six for them to sprout) the sun beat down unmercifully on the poor defenseless seeds; and during those same seven long, long days I ministered as only a prospective father can to each of those millions of embryonic grass blades by keeping them always moist and cool. Sundown marked the end of one day's engagement; sunrise signaled the beginning of another.

But as is always true of birth and death, the time does come. And so it was that one morning last week I awoke to find myself the proud posessor of a lawn. True, only a slight greenish tinge touched the area where for a week past I had fought with water my own personal drought; but nevertheless it was alive and it was mine. And now I could rest from the ordeal of having been attending physician for a billion successful pregnancies in one short week.

And so today, my neighbors, who went through a similar ordeal at the same time, join me as veterans as we compare the merits of our respective progenies. Each day's growth is noted; and just as doting parents, we are confident in our own minds at least that no lawn can possibly compare with that which we ourselves have brought into being.

It is saddening to contemplate that come mowing time this new found affection may change to disgust when responsibilities deaden the creative pride.

RAGLANDS RETURN

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Ragland returned this week from a two week vacation trip in Southern California.

Ragland was to leave this week for Illinois Valley where he will help train fire fighters.

PRICE CUTS??

phooey!

FORDS

STILL COST LESS

Look behind the smoke-screen of recently announced new car price cuts and discover:

1 Ford factory-suggested prices, model for model, are lowest of the low-price three... based on comparison of manufacturers' suggested retail delivered prices.

2 Since Ford Dealers sell more cars than anybody they can afford to give you a bigger trade-in deal!

Lowest price and highest trade means your cash cost is smallest when you buy a beautiful new '57 Ford!
