

SAN FRANCISCO

She has charm and is a lady,
Every inch and every way,
And distinguished in appearance,
Noon and night and dawn and day.
Noble blessings are her ocean,
Stately hills and lovely Bay.

Far renowned are all her landmarks,
So's her mystic charm in veil.
Radiant bride she is in sunshine,
With a welcome smile or hail.
And at night she has the splendor
Of a living fairytale.
Native child as well as stranger,
Now and from the days of yore,
Captivated by her first sight,
Or be born within her door,
Idolize her as the beauty
That intoxicates before.
Ships have anchored here to glory,
Feet are set upon her shore.
Crowned and blessed by earth and heaven,
An beloved forevermore.
O Queen of transient cities here,
My eternal "Je t'adore."

--Minco de Bruin

Many of our readers will remember Minco de Bruin (Mike to his friends) who resided in Brookings a couple of years ago, and his "America, the Beautiful" which was published in the Pilot last fall. Mike is now a resident of San Francisco, and the above poem expresses his appreciation for that city.

Tickets are now available for the nightly vevue and horse show at the 92nd Oregon State Fair, opening in Salem on August 31. 100 picnic tables will be available in an enlarged picnic area

STRIKES HURT LUMBER

Strikes among the building trades in major consuming areas are aggravating an already low demand for Northwest forest products, and prices has fallen to their lowest levels in several months, according to Random Lengths, Eugene weekly lumber market letter.

Meanwhile greenlumber production continues to outdistance demand, and unless prices stabilize, some mill closures are imminent. Orders come in a dribbling volume, but generally are highly specified and demand quick shipment.

Plywood production has not yet caught up with the orders placed during Fourth of July shutdowns but sheathing demand is off slightly and prices are weakening.

The last few days the work men on the jetty have been adding to the elevation of the south jetty with lighter fill.
