This is the one time each year that the Grangers hold open house for the community. An interesting program is being planned by a committee under the Grange Master, Joe Zumpfe.

to return and finish the job. Mike Skipworth, who lives in the trailer at the Anchorage, found one wet kitten on the dock, and took it to the trailer, then Darlene Jaklewicz was down to the dock a few minutes later and found three more wet kittens. Apparently they had been put in a sack with a weight and tossed from the dock, then the sack must have come open and let the kittens out. One can sympathize with the drowning of unwanted kittens rather than just dropping them off somewhere, but it can be done in a bucket at home and then bury the dead animals rather than have them crawling out of the river half dead.
