Odd British Industry

"Drudging" is a recognized industry in English ports. The professional "drudger" with the aid of long and specially constructed poles called "hitchers," salvages coal during the process of coaling ship. The "drudging" fleet, a collection of queer little broad-beamed boats, is to be seen at work at all waterside places where ships take in coal or discharge it. A certain amount of coal falls overboard into the river or harbor mud, from which it is retrieved by the "drudgers," who wash it, take it ashore, and sell it to householders at a low price. Coal "drudging" is a skilled occupation, and one that is handed down from father to son.

When you do the right thing, you spoil the effect if you brag about it.

Men are better judged by what they haven't than by what they have.

Be thankful for failures. They teach you things you badly need to know.
