Sackcloth and Wheat for Destitute Chinese

Tapping 'Ever Normal Granary'

At left a farmer of Midwest corn belt shovels corn from one of the bins of the department of agriculture's "ever normal granary." The department took over this surplus corn in payment of loans to farmers in '38 and '39. Now farmers are buying it back to feed their stock. At Commissioning of New Hospital Ship

General view of scene on deck of U. S. S. Solace, first hospital ship to be added to U. S. navy since World war, as the craft was commissioned in Brooklyn. The new addition to the navy was formerly the Clyde Mallory liner, Iroquois. The ship has 400 beds and will carry 13 medical officers and 3 dental officers.

Last Flight for Nazi

According to the Moscow censor-approved caption for this radiophoto received in New York from the Soviet capital, Soviet sailors are shown inspecting the remains of a German plane. It was not stated where the plane was brought to earth.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—Ever loyal in word and, more importantly in deed, to his liege lord, King-Emperor George VI, as to those who had previously occupied the throne of Britain, the maharajah of Patiala comes to Singapore with troops from India to look over Indian forces landed at the Malay base some months ago.

In the first World war the maharajah placed his entire fighting force of 30,000 highly trained Sikhs at the British service and after the war, when revolutionary disturbances occurred in the Punjab, he mobilized his troops who took over the protection of railroads running through the Punjab to the northwest frontier.

Sir Bhupindar Singh, ruler of Patiala, second largest state in the Punjab section of India and one of the wealthiest of India's potentates, has often bedazzled London and other world capitals with his Oriental splendor. He is six feet tall, broad shouldered, black bearded. He goes turbaned, gloriously enrobed, be-spangled with precious jewels.

A conservative estimate has placed his annual income at $4,000,000. He lives up to such a sum, certainly. If a dog strikes his fancy he will pay $1,500 for the animal, provided he can get it no cheaper, and for a pair of flamboyant trousers of special weave he makes no bones about parting with $1,200. Last time he was in London with a hundred retainers, a retinue as magnificent as any glorified pageant, he took an entire floor of a great Strand hotel.

He succeeded his father to the Patiala throne in 1900 when he was a lad of nine. Taking over direct rule at the age of 19, he immediately revealed qualities endearing him to his subjects.

State of Crops In His Domain Tax Barometer

One of his early acts involved the adjustment of taxes in accordance with the state of crops. If the harvest was poor taxes were remitted and his consideration in this respect has been exemplified in many other ways, as for instance in the traveling medical caravans serving the sick and diseased and injured of his far flung people.

All in all, the maharajah is a prince humane and wise and so recognized by his people. He reads philosophy and scientific works to keep his mind on edge and in polo, cricket and hunting he finds his main diversions.

A strict Sikh in religion, he is not at all narrow. Once in London he visited a Salvation Army station in the Limehouse district. "My faith," he said to the Salvationists, "is not yours. But truth is a jewel of many facets."

REAR ADMIRAL Sherwood Ayerst Taffinder, commanding two U. S. cruisers visiting Australia on a training cruise, spoke like the bluff sailorman he is to the well-known committee of citizens of Brisbane, that greeted him upon arrival. "You must not go all out in these receptions," he said, "for you are likely to see more of the United States navy."

The admiral is at home in alien lands and among alien peoples. Once, in line with service rendered by the United States Naval mission to Peru, he commanded the Peruvian navy for two years. He was chief of staff and aide to the commander of the battle force in 1939 and in previous years was engineering and at other times, navigation officer of various warships.

He commanded the Battleship Texas in 1935 and many a young officer sat under him when he held courses in navigation and engineering at the naval academy. He wears the Victory medal with the Atlantic fleet clasp for service in the first World war. Born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1884, he was graduated from the National Service academy on the Severn in 1906.

SUGGESTION

"Don't you think you'd like to marry a young lawyer like me?"
"I dunno. How much would you charge for a divorce if I wanted it and take your fee out of my alimony?"

Opportunist

Brown—I say, old man, did you ever win an argument with your wife?

Black—Yes, once. But it was many, many years ago. He sighed at the thought.

Brown—What about?
Black—I don't exactly remember the subject we were discussing at the time. But I do remember distinctly, and with pleasure, that we had just moved, that we were laying carpet, and that her mouth was too full of tacks for her to talk.

Doctor Learns Lesson

The Patient—Do you think you can cure my lameness?

The Doctor—Sure! I had a case after four treatments he was able to run away without paying his bill.

Finis

"What do you do when you meet an irresistible talker?"
"I introduce him to an immovable bore."
