

Fun by the hundreds at fourth annual folk festival

CURIOUS CUSTOMERS—Visitors at the festival browse through dozens of hand-made craft concessions looking for "just the right thing."

SO MANY PEOPLE—This little tyke, hanging on to his mother, seems bewildered by the variety of colors and sounds and the crush of people surrounding him.

Nehalem Valley Folk Art Festival

Folks from all over were in Jewell last weekend for the Fourth Annual Nehalem Valley Folk Art Festival. The two day affair features continuous live music on stage, a bee-keeping exhibit, mime and juggling ensembles and dozens of local craftsmen and their products.

A collection of historical local photographs were on display in one building while outside local churches sold food to hungry people, all the while livestock exhibits and craft demonstrations were taking place all around the edge of the Jewell School playground. Everyone, it seemed, was doing something or watching someone else do something, as overflow crowds kept everyone busy.
