

Air Conditioners That Also Heat: Problem-Solver For Your Room Addition

Adding a room to fit your family's changed living or recreational needs? Many homeowners are—and most find themselves faced with the problem of such additional space overtaxing their present heating and/or cooling systems.

The solution is relatively simple: plan the room addition to include a built-in air conditioner which can both heat and cool, so you can be assured of year-round comfort in the new room without affecting the rest of the home.

One manufacturer, Hotpoint, offers four heat/cool models with capacities ranging from 8,200 to 18,000-BTUH for cooling and from 3,700 to 13,200-BTUH for heating.

These heating/cooling capacities are adequate for rooms ranging from approximately 360 to 1,100-square feet, depending on extremes in exposure, shading, insulation, and building construction. (Metric equivalents: approximately 33.4 to 102.2-square meters.)

The smallest unit, the Deluxe Heat/Cool, operates on 115 volts, so special wiring is not required. It can be plugged into the properly grounded electrical outlets you will install in the new room. This two-speed model has a 10-position thermostat and four-way adjustable air direction.

The three Heritage II Heat/Cool models operate on either 230 or 208 volts and feature fine furniture styling with a hinged front panel concealing the controls. They are two-speed models with eight thermostat positions, and four-way adjustable air direction.

All four models are designed to fit standard window sizes, and are also suitable for through-the-wall installation.
