

AGRICULTURAL CHAPTER No. 26

Wedding bells take the spotlight in Agricultural chapter's first appearance in "Chapter News." Miss Edna Youngren, bacteriologist in department headquarters at Salem, and Donald Duffield, in charge of weights and measures, traveled altarward November 23. Following the honeymoon, both reported back to duty.

The chapter has added a fine group of new members during the year, and now it's nip and tuck between the plant division and the division of foods and dairies for head-of-the-roll honors. Newest employees to come into the fold are Ben Davidson, shipping point supervisor at Redmond, and H. H. Calkins, Powell Butte, also with the central Oregon shipping point service. Eighty per cent of the new members are servicemen, either returned to their civilian posts with the department or added to the payroll as new employees.

Frank McKennon, the chapter president and chief of the department's division of plant industry, received an outstanding honor at the hands of the National Association of Marketing Officials. At the annual meeting in California in late October he was named second vice-president.

Sympathies of department members throughout the state are extended to Ben Durland. Mrs. Durland passed away in November in La Grande, where she had gone from their Salem home to visit her daughter, Mrs. Henry (Ruth) Culp. Condolences went earlier to three other chapter members who lost loved ones—Miss Hilda Bartels, upon the passing of her mother; Ella S. Wilson, whose sister died in September; and C. N. Andreassen of Pendleton (branch office of the division of grain inspection), who also lost a sister.

Virgil Hiatt, one of the World War II veterans home from foreign lands earlier this year, discarded his chemist's apron long enough November 26 to give a talk before the Aesculapian club of Salem high school. About chemistry, of course.

A. B. "Art" Caples spent his November vacation in San Francisco visiting a son. Caples, working out of Forest Grove, covers several counties for the division of foods and dairies.
