

The newlywed husband was more surprised than pleased when he found only a piece of cheese on his plate at dinner time.

"Your mean," he asked in alarm, "that this is all we have to eat tonight?"

"Yes dear," his wife explained gently, "when the chops caught fire and fell into the dessert, I had to use the soup to put it out."

MONEY MATTERS

With prices at an all-time high
For everything I need to buy,
My scanty dollars soon are spent
For food, for clothing and for rent.
There's little left for trips or treats,
For theatre tickets, concert seats,
As income never seems to vary
But stays completely stationary.
With longing eyes I look ahead
And hope sometime before I'm dead
I'll see a thing I really covet,
And buy it just because I love it.
