LA GRANDE CHAPTER No. 4

The La Grande shops have gone through their regular "spring house-cleaning," and now are all set for summer. The patching crew and oiling crew have been sent on their "merry" way, awnings have been taken down from the attic and placed on the windows, the trees have been trimmed down to a mere fuzz, and the grass has been raked and received its first cutting of the year.

Clarence Gruis, La Grande shops, had the distinction of being the first man to take his vacation. Clarence went Portland way.

Leo Brunell, shop foreman, also vacationing, took off for points east—Minnesota and Missouri. Leo informed us that he was going to visit relatives.

Paul Cason, La Grande shops, on vacation, says he is just going to stay around home and (I think I understood correctly) is going to do the cooking while his wife is away.

That fellow, "Old Man Bad Luck," made a visit to the shops, and for everyone concerned, he was not welcomed. Leslie Bellus was first struck. Leslie cut his hand on a piece of equipment, this leaving "Less" on the sick list for weeks. Next to get the feel of Bad Luck was Charlie Erbe. Charlie was cutting wood and somehow got his hand, instead of the wood, under his axe. This put Charlie also on the sick list for weeks. Then Mr. Bad Luck, not content with the misery he had already dealt, placed Clinton McIntosh on the receiving end of his next blow. Mac's house burned completely down, leaving him and his family without a single item,
