

WOMEN CELEBRATE 100 YEARS OF RIGHTS

"In this centennial year of the start of the women's rights movement, we would do well to appraise searchingly where we should go from here. . . . On the economic side, the importance to working women of active participation in some labor organization for collective bargaining provisions is crucial. . . . Only so will women's special problems of security and sufficiency of income . . . be given really constructive attention." These are the words of Ordway Tead, distinguished author and editor of books on social and economic questions, in his address delivered at the meeting of the one hundredth anniversary of the first women's rights convention.

We feel that Mr. Tead is referring to all employee organizations which speak collectively for their membership. The OSEA performs this function for women state employees—for all state employees in Oregon.
