

brary. Her work is with children since her position at the State Library has given her experience with the needs of young readers. She writes that some of her patrons are Puerto Ricans who speak their native language better than English. This makes it necessary to have an interpreter handy or be a mind reader when the conversation gets lengthy.

Betty's long week-ends are spent studying and exploring New York City with guide book in hand. She has met many people who are friends and relatives of Salem residents and made new friends at International House. She reports that the activities of the house are so extensive that a resident need not leave it to find recreational, social, cultural and educational programs.

Her letters are bubbling with accounts of new sights, unusual people, and novel situations. Those who know Betty will appreciate that she will welcome and make the most of every chance to learn and do new things.

While Betty was in Salem she was active in the Oregon State Employees Association, the League of Women Voters, the Red Cross and the Young Women's Christian Association.

Oregon Winter Sports

(Cover Picture)

We are indebted to the Travel Information Department of the Oregon State Highway Commission for the following data regarding the winter sports areas of our great State and the facilities available for their enjoyment.

More than 20 winter sports areas are to be in operation. Of these, 17 are in 13 Oregon national forests, one at Crater Lake National Park and another on non-federal lands on Siskiyou summit. Other areas are located in the immediate vicinities of different towns and cities for limited use, without prepared facilities.
