

they are plagued by the high cost of groceries, the same as anyone else.

Indians and Celilo Falls have become synonymous with the Columbia river and with Oregon as a result of countless years of association. Pictures of Indians and the falls have appeared in publications throughout the world.

In a sense they have added to Oregon's fame, with the result that Celilo is more than an ordinary tourist attraction for out-of-state visitors who travel U. S. Highway 30 on tours of Oregon's cool green vacation lands. Here they may watch, from a distance, Indians at their unique tasks, which can be observed in no other place in the United States.

Oregon is a state of many diversifications, of which Celilo Falls is but one. From 400 miles of scenic coastline to shining peaks, Oregon is a land of rare scenic appeal and countless vacation opportunities. A booklet covering Oregon's vacation lands may be obtained by writing the Travel Information Department, Oregon State Highway Commission, Salem, Oregon.

Flammable vs. Inflammable

National Fire Protection Association and the American Society for Testing Materials, have already adopted this practice. The word flammable, not inflammable is considered correct for use in all American Standards.

—Industrial Standardization

Although Oregon as a state has yet to observe its first centennial, scientists say its earliest residents, pre-historic aborigines, came as long ago as 20,000 years or before ice-age mammals became extinct.
