Dr. H. D. Sheldon Speaks, "The Future of Science in America"

Dr. H. D. Sheldon's address on "The Future of Science in America," furnished another interesting number in the series of lectures, based on the development of universities and University life in America. He spoke in substance as follows:

"In the future we will hear much of the part science is playing in the development of our country, for science has a utilitarian motive and is the key-note to the modern advance in civilization.

"Foreigners say that the American people excel in a wide diffusion of general knowledge. This, no doubt is true, but it is also true that America is excelled in the quantity as well as in the quality of her scientific knowledge by some other countries, especially by Germany.

"The reasons given for the fact that we do not lead in science are three: First, we are a new people confronted with economic and industrial problems and have not had time for science. This excuse, however, is out grown now. Second, our educational centers are so scattered that scientific men do not have the opportunity of associating with other experts in their line. Third, and most important of all, the organization of our University system is not such as tends to foster development along scientific lines. Our men of high ability are obliged to spend their time in class room work and have no leisure for scientific research. The removal of this difficulty will come with the development of secondary schools which will relieve the universities and leave them freedom for the development of science.

"Our educational system for many years was based on the English idea that a university should stand for the development of character without specialization. This view is good to a certain extent but it underestimates intelligence, the objective feature in any educational system, and hinders scientific advancement.

"Another thing highly detrimental to scientific work is the fact that many of our universities have disregarded efficiency for numbers, and have come to regard athletic and debating victories and social prestige as being the foremost things.

"The qualities which make Americans so effective have been developed during the nineteenth century. At the beginning of the last century we were simply an imitation of England, but we have built up a high standard of civilization which has broken down class distinction and has attained an excellence of high standard.

"The time is coming when the student can say that the United States has a scientific system inferior to none in the world."

"Pat" McArthur was at Corvallis Saturday.

Mr. Perkins is visiting his son, Cloan Perkins, '06.

Y. M. C. A.

H. O. "Chunk" Hill, International Secretary for the Pacific Coast, visited the University Friday afternoon and evening and spoke to the men in the association room at four o'clock. He spoke of the work the Christian Association is doing in different parts of the world. The Christian Association stands for service to men and its object is to show men that the life of unselfishness is the one that counts after leaving school. Mr. Hill said that the chief work of perfecting the existing organization is done by student conferences, conventions, etc. In this connection he mentioned the Oregon-Idaho State Convention to be held at Salem, November 25, 26, 27, and urged that the University be represented there by a large delegation.

Rates of one and one-third fare for the round trip will be granted and the delegates will be entertained by the people of Salem and Willamette University as hosts. The proximity of the seat of the convention should make it possible for a dozen or two of men to attend. Harvey Wheeler can furnish all information desired about the trip to Salem, and will be glad to receive names of those who can go.

GALEY-DODGE

The wedding of Miss Rosa M. Dodge, '04, to Mr. Henry C. Galey, a former U. O. student, took place last Thursday afternoon at the home of Miss Dodge's parents in Ashland. Mr. and Mrs. Galey are to make their future home in Tacoma, where Mr. Galey's business interests lie, and they left for the north immediately after their wedding. Mr. Galey and Miss Dodge are both remembered by all who knew them at college as very fine young people, and they have the best wishes of all. Miss Katharyn Crawford, '05, was in Ashland to attend the wedding, and took with her many tokens of esteem for the bride and groom.
