ASSEMBLY

President Ressler of the Monmouth State Normal School, gave the lecture at Assembly Wednesday morning, taking as his subject, "Student Honor." For a number of years Professor Ressler was superintendent of the Eugene public schools, afterwards accepting a position in the University, from which he was called to the Monmouth Normal.

In his long experience in school work, President Ressler has had opportunities to observe students and to learn their ways, and so is in a position to discuss a few phases of student honor. In the first of his lecture he announced that he would draw his examples from institutions in other parts of the United States.

"In a book written on the subject of student honor, Dean Briggs of Harvard, observed that there was a want of a finer sense of honor among the students, particularly noticeable in athletics, in the authorship of written work, in excuses of neglected work, and other relations with the faculty.

"During their college life, students are inclined to feel somewhat lax, and President Elliott in his address at the beginning of the year, charged the Harvard students of their duty to their parents for the opportunity of coming to school and called it dishonorable to overspend allowances, to run into debt, and to be inattentive to study.

"Rowdyism and destruction to property do not need to be discussed here. Another question that the students of the University have solved for themselves is in regard to taking part in town affairs unless a citizen. It is beneath the dignity of a student to take part in municipal affairs in which he has no personal interest."

Professor Ressler discussed at length the question of honor in athletics, showing that participants cannot be too careful, including even the yell leaders.

Having questioned the dishonesty of the men's side of university life, Professor Ressler turned his attention to that of the woman's, quoting a number of questions from an article written by Miss

Tanner. Forty-six per cent of the answers to the question whether it would be honorable to keep fare from the conductor if he failed to ask for it, were in the affirmative; in regard to bluffing in class recitations and exaggeration in conversation, fifty per cent were in the affirmative. Most of the reasons given for not doing such things held the idea that taking advantage of another person, weakened the student's own character.

"Students have a different standard of conduct than conscience. They regard only the standards of the university and for these the faculty are responsible. The question has gotten beyond whether it is morally right or wrong; it is a question whether it is gentlemanly or ladylike. The reason that a double standard prevails in college is that students regard the college not as real life, but only a preparation for life. When they shall consider that life in college is the same as the life of the world, then the standard will be one. It is becoming more and more true that the names of scholar and gentleman are synonymous. In conclusion, may I quote from Theodore Roosevelt, that the calling of every lady and gentleman is to work honestly, play fairly, and take life seriously."
