Given Below, Showing Why Students and Townspeople Should Attend
Debate on Thursday

When two well-trained football teams contest on Kincaid field for the intercollegiate championship of the Northwest, the grandstand is filled to capacity and thousands of people line the side lines. If, as is generally conceded, the achievements of the mind are more valuable than the exhibition of physical prowess, Villard hall should not be able to hold the audience that will gather for the interstate debate next Thursday night. The contesting teams are trained as thoroughly as ever football men were trained, they know every phase of the interesting forensic game in which they are to engage, and there will be many a spirited clash and sarcastic play of words between trained debaters, which will be as interesting to the refined and educated auditor as a football scrimmage where it is "third down and ten to go." The Northwest championship is also at stake, and in an activity which the people of the state at large estimate more highly than any branch of athletics, for it shows the development of mind and reasoning powers which measures the success of the University.

The debate will, of course, be intensely interesting to Oregon students on account of the great stake involved, and it will also be interesting to others. The question of Japanese exclusion is an exceedingly live one, and one in which all citizens, and especially laboring men, are interested. No one can be indifferent as to whether the Jap is to take his place along with the white man in Oregon. This the affirmative team, under the able leadership of Jesse H. Bond, assisted by such worthy colleagues as Walter M. Eaton and W. C. Nicholas, will contend he should not do. The topic of Japanese exclusion is bound to grow in interest. Any citizen who wishes a thorough understanding of both sides of the question can get it Thursday night in an hour and a half. Two months of work by trained debaters with good library facilities and a chance to study conditions at first hand, will result in a debate that will develop every phase of the question broadly and deeply.

The debate will offer something to everyone who cares to attend. The student will see in it glory for the Varsity; the younger debater will be able to study by observation the most

Shall the Japanese Be Excluded?

BOTH SIDES OF THIS QUESTION WILL BE ABLY DISCUSSED BY DEBATERS REPRESENTING THE STATE UNIVERSITIES OF IDAHO AND OREGON, AT VILLARD HALL, THURSDAY EVEN-ING, MARCH 26.

A live question of vital interest to the future of the Pacific Coast employers, employees, and plain citizens.
