A long editorial will soon appear in the Oregon Weekly setting forth the reasons why the editor of the Oregon Weekly should either receive college credit or a salary. When the editor is forced to cut his classes because some members of his staff do not turn in their copy he feels that the way of the newspaper man is hard. Professors do not care whether the paper comes out or not and look only to the editor to do his required work which he must shirk at times out of loyalty to his fellow students. Therefore a complete compilation of the wails of the editor will be foisted on the students soon. Watch for it.
