Gorrell at Assembly

Interesting details of Chinese life and customs were given at assembly Wednesday, by Oscar Gorrell, '01, in a lecture illustrated with more than 100 stereoptican slides from photographs taken in the vicinity of the city of Amoy, where he taught for six years.

Mr. Gorrell told entertainingly of the quaint superstitions of the Chinese and the deep reverence in which they hold their dead. Among the slides thrown on the screen were several of the hillsides surrounding the city dotted with countless graves.

The Chinese, according to Mr. Gorrell, have no regular burial grounds, but the place of interment is determined entirely by "lucky" circumstances, sloping hillsides commanding a view of the water being considered unusually choice vantage points for the restless spirits of the departed. For several weeks in the autumn the gates of hades are supposed to be left unguarded, and each spirit takes a "vacation" during which it roams the earth unmolested. At such a time, however, the shade is distinctly material in its habits and it becomes a duty of its relatives to provide plenty of food for it.

Among the other scenes shown by Mr. Gorrell were several views of the river dwellers, who are born, live, and die on the water and form a respectable part of China's population. He also gave a number of pictures of the rice fields in process of cultivation and of the home life of the average Chinese rice farmer.

Mr. Gorrell was introduced by President Campbell.

Good Joke on the Weekly

Newspaper correspondents in the University have been laughing over what they consider a good joke on the editor of the Weekly. It is all about two items which appeared last week, one announcing a new course in masonry and the other mentioning the purchase of twenty books on socialism by the library on recommendation of Professor Howe. It develops that masonry is a regular course established years ago. Professor Howe modestly disclaims recommendation of investment in socialistic literature. The items were accepted from a member of the class in journalism and were not verified by a regular reporter as should have been done.
