

Exchanges

The Superlative, of Cottage Grove (Oregon) High School, yet in volume one, is among the excellent exchanges the Oregon Monthly receives. The Superlative belongs to the class of school journals that must combine literary and news matter, and it does the work well. Each department is separate and the grouping is good. The literary matter is not limited to stories, but also includes more serious studies, as in the March issue, the article on "The Initiative and Referendum—Oregon's Big stick."

The Freshmen of Whitman College, Walla Walla, have issued a very creditable number of the "Pioneer." The leading article is an original translation from some unknown language of a comic something or other entitled, "Quid Rusticulus Urbanus Faciat," being the adventures of a green Freshman from the fields during his first year at college. The "play" is readable and would make an interesting turn on the stage.

The students of the electrical department of the Montana Agricultural College, (Bozeman) had charge of a recent issue of The Exponent. The stories all hinge about electrician heroes and even the jokes have the electrical flavor.

The Lens (East Portland High School) thinks the new cooking course has been established as a means of carrying out the purposes of the Constitution of the United States—"To insure domestic tranquility." And, by the way, The Lens has some good verse.

"CAMPUS VERSE."

The Georgian, (University of Georgia) desires to call the attention of its exchanges to a book issued by two members of the Senior Class of the University and entitled "Campus Verse." We do not intend to comment upon the favorable reviews it is every day receiving. Our object is to present to other colleges the significance of such a book. In every college there appears from time to time verse that is undoubtedly worthy of preservation. Appearing in the medium of the college magazine it is either lost or removed from prominence. A book that gathers and preserves the best of all such verse is a distinct compliment to the atmosphere of the college that it represents. Such a book is "Campus Verse." It is
