

meet under the direction of Mr. Hayward is a step in the right direction.

Another valuable idea was started this year in the College Hour, when on the beautiful Oregon campus all distinctions of Freshman and Sophomore, student and faculty, were forgotten in a brief space of fun and frolic. Junior week-end, an extension of University day, will be eagerly welcomed as established custom in years to come.

These six new "first annuals" should be perpetuated. They will all tend to enrich college life.

But let us not become satisfied with these alone. At no time should tradition be so firmly fixed that the initiative spirit is stilled. It occurs to the Oregon Monthly that certain other innovations are distinctly needed. As suggestions, are offered the following; A dramatic club; athletic teams for women; a debating intercollegiate league for women and a journalist club to further good fellowship and increased interest among those interested in college journalism.

COMMENCEMENT—Students who wish to gain from their college life something more than is gained through the routine of study and relaxation; students who wish to draw in that subtle essence of inspiration should endeavor to be present during at least one commencement besides their own. Then can we know University life as a dramatic whole, with true artistic proportions which in the daily toil of details must escape us unobserved.

Commencement is the time when we may escape the bondage of the immediate and consider only the ultimate values of things. Let not the undergraduate miss this opportunity.
