[illegible] Fuller, [illegible], [illegible] Adams and quite a number of pupils attended services, held by Rev. Patterson, in Salem last Sunday.

The plumber boys are very busy putting [illegible] of the steam pipes under the [illegible] buildings. Mr. Becker says they are getting along nicely and will soon be through.

"The man who has learned one trade thoroughly has half learned every other trade, whereas if he learned no trade thoroughly he has acquired nothing of value to him as a workman."

[illegible] early on the morning of the 17th and we were all awakened by the sweet strains which gave us that "happy feeling" with which it is well to begin the day.

WANTED.—Two bright, [illegible], clean, healthy, husky boys to work in the bakery. The [illegible] is needed in the [illegible]. For further information consult Mr. H. E. Brown, [illegible].

Miss O'Hara has been transferred to Chemawa and promoted to the position of [illegible]. In the time she has been employed at this school she has always been [illegible] a most [illegible] employee, and [illegible] she leaves a large circle of friends who [illegible] and [illegible].—[Puget Sound Indian Guide.]

One of the most [illegible] and efficient officials in the Interior Department said, "If a boy wants only to keep the shop clean and tools in order during his first [illegible] he has learned plenty. That is something every Indian student should remember and carry into effect. [illegible] are necessary [illegible] will [illegible] in accomplishing success and happiness."

The boys [illegible] a good deal of "[illegible]" [illegible] Mr. Campbell. At first they seemed to resent the [illegible] but before it was over they seemed to thoroughly enjoy it. A big crowd of boys surrounded the bear pit while Mr. Campbell was down in it with the bears running all around him. They enjoyed the clumsy antics of old Marguerite and Jessie very much, the funny little ones seemed to know that they were the observed of all observers and behaved just like a [illegible] little child does who likes to show off.

Inspector J. E. Jenkins is again with us after an absence of four years and we are glad to welcome him again to Chemawa. Mr. Jenkins is a thorough practical business man, an experienced educator and a very competent and just official. His many wise suggestions for improving our plant are very helpful and will result in much good to this school. Since Mr. Jenkins was here last he has visited and inspected the schools and agencies in nearly every part of the United States and has become thoroughly familiar with the conditions and needs of the service.

Inspector Jenkins gave an excellent address to the whole student body on Thursday night. Seldom has a school an opportunity of hearing such a good, practical talk from one who knows of what he speaks. Work was the keynote of the gentleman's talk and the strong, sensible words were delivered by one whose looks and physique fully carried out the idea he was promulgating. He impressed upon our students the necessity of industry and effort. "If you attempt to learn a trade, stick to it. Concentration and singleness of purpose will accomplish wonders. One trade thoroughly learned means a knowledge of all trades. Some literary education should accompany an industrial education. An intelligent man is always a better workman than an ignorant one." Mr. Jenkins further said that he was proud to see the boys and girls who were before him, but he wondered if he would be proud to meet them ten or twenty years from now. That depends entirely upon themselves. The Inspector's words were listened to with close attention, and a hearty round of applause followed the closing words of this strong, sensible and [illegible] talk.
