Supt. Potter of Chemawa is on a tour of the Sound country drumming up pupils for his school. Chemawa is splendidly equipped for both literary and industrial training and boys and girls desiring fitting themselves for a useful life should jump at the chance offered them. — [Indian Guide.

The Evil-minded

The evil minded person continually searches for evil in those around him. In nature he sees only clouds, mud, and malaria. In art he looks for a crack in the varnish or a flaw in the marble. He looks upon a kind act as a stroke of policy and a christian life as a cloak to hypocrisy. He cannot admire the beauty of a horse for he is looking for ringbones and spavins. He gets no enjoyment from a beautiful song for he is on the alert to catch the singer in walse tone. Hills are hard things to climb, flowers are weeds, and woods represent no many stumps to be grubbed out before a crop of potatoes can be raised. He likes to brag about his own possessions in order to fill the hearts of his listeners with envy, while his own heart is filled to bursting over the possession by some one else of something he lacks.

If you do not admire such a person, know that he has become evil by thinking evil, even as the pure minded become so by thinking good. — [Indian Guide.
