Little Things.

A good by kiss is a little thing.

With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the reason out of the door
Of a thoughtless mind or a cruel sting.

That you made us love ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet as of old time.

After the bill of the day,

And it comes to the furnace plowed by care,
The lines on the forehead you once called bill.

In the years that have flown away,

To a little thing to say, "You are kind,
I love you no less," each night,
Do it make a thrill through your heart. I had.

For love is higher, here is found,

As we climb life's rugged height.

We are given each other for love's sake.

We take but we do not give.

It seems so easy some and to these,

But we take the love grudgingly, less and less.

Till we utter and heed to live.—(Selected).

Boys in the Printing Office.

If boys must work and earn wages there are few places better for them than the printing office. Some of the greatest men the world has produced obtained part of their education while boys in printing offices. But the printing office is no place for the boy without brains or ambition, nor for a dull, slovenly creature to go there because the work is light, or nervous light. It is an excellent place for an observing, thinking and studiously inclined boy. There are again printing offices where work will not be looked with boys and will not give slight or instruction to ignorance or to young workers whose competition they fear. In some respects a boy is in luck who has to go to a reformatory, especially the boy who wants to learn the printing trade, as in most of the State Reformatories for boys there are printing offices where the boys are taught the printing business.—
