"Joe Brignone has been working for us at our logging camp and was satisfactory. His work and the pains he took proved to us that he has had a little experience in steam pump work, and I am glad to hear that this boy was from your school and would like to have him again when you can spare him

Yours respectfully,

It is very interesting to hear and to compare the legends from two different tribes about the rainbow. The first tribesman told his legend thus: "My Indians never point at the rainbow because if you do you will grow crooked and you will be humpbacked just like the rainbow."

The second man told his like this: "My Indians say that if you point at the rainbow with your first finger you will lose your finger, but if you point at it with your thumb no harm will come to your thumb."—Talks and Thoughts.
