

Tobacco Law of Oregon

SECTIONS 1980 AND 1981 OF BELLINGER AND COTTON'S ANNOTATED CODES AND STATUTES OF OREGON:

Section 1980. It shall be unlawful to sell, barter, trade, give, or in any manner furnish to any minor under the age of eighteen years any tobacco, cigars, or cigarettes in any form, or any compound in which tobacco forms a component part, without the written consent or order of such minor's parent or guardian; and when such minor has no parent or guardian, then in that case consent may be given by the county court, sitting for the transaction of county business, upon proper application in the county in which said minor may have his residence. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars.

Section 1981. It shall be unlawful for any minor under the age of eighteen years to smoke or in any way use any cigar, cigarette or tobacco in any form whatsoever in any public highway, street, place, square or resort. Any minor violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction, be fined in any sum not less than one or more than ten dollars, or by imprisonment at the option of the court, two days for each offense.

Teach Children to Make Friends

Teach the child, indirectly, yet forcibly, that friendships are to be sought; that he must do something to win the favor of those about him; that neither good looks nor clothes, nor station, will do it—nothing but deeds and kindly words. See to it that the little one tries to please his playmates, and show him that he is partly to blame when others dislike him. The little girl who learns to entertain during her doll days will be past mistress of the art when she opens her doors to society.

Parties are not necessary; in fact, it is better learned in the informal visiting, when she endeavors to make her playmates "have a good time" at her home.

Reverting to the first principal, it is easy to see that, since all people want friends, we have only to be a friend to be appreciated. Love, in all its degrees from liking up, attracts "Do not even the publicans love those who love them?" said the friend of the world. Indeed, it is almost impossible for us to dislike one who manifests a friendship for us. Hence, a popular person is one of many likes and few dislikes.

But this is only the primer page. Making acquaintances is not making friends, alas! One may be for the day only, the other is for "keeps."

Hold the acquaintance by putting him in the foreground, yet not eliminating self; bow graciously to the egotism that dwells in others; be interested in their interests, and show regard for their opinions, although you may openly and politely differ from them. This is not necessarily talking of their affairs. Persons of refinement resent personal questions, but being interested in matters which engross them is always pleasing, while the art of conversation is the finding of "common ground" and the making it a dialogue, not a monologue.—Ex.

Little grains of powder,
 Little daubs of paint,
 Make the smiling "flusies"
 Look like what they ain't.
