

The Printer and Nesika picnic

The picnic given by Misses Jones and Brewers to the printers and members of the Nesika Club last Friday was what may be rightfully termed a genuine "Jollification." Games of all sorts were played, and while some played, others to pass the time away sung songs, recited such Ragtimes as "Mary had a William goat," "This is the domicile erected by John" and various other favorite poetry. Prizes were offered in the contests. Gordon Hobucket won the prize in the potato race, Louise Murray in the egg-fanning race Ernest Brewer in the egg race and Joe Dillstrom and his three faithful colleagues J. M. Teabo Thos. McCully and Wm. Beach in the laughing contest.

Along toward evening every one naturally began to feel hungry, but they didn't have long to wait, for they were soon served with very choice eatables and Oh say, talk about eat, they just, did eat, and eat; its a wonder some of these boys or girls especially are not on the sick list—At any rate its a time that will be long remembered.

There was no school on Wednesday and the teachers and the girls went to town to do shopping and also to take advantage of the fire sale.

INDUSTRIAL NOTES

The people in the domestic science are proud of their new curtains.

The mess has the most delicious crisp lettuce, and every one enjoys it.

The vetch is being cut and hauled to the cow-barn by the farmers and dairymen.

Mrs. Cooper says that all the girls wish they could make as good biscuits as Violet Berner.

The farmers and dairymen have just cut vetch and filled the two silos and have commenced making hay.

The eighth grade girls worked in the domestic science last week and made the pies that have been made for sometime.

The printers finished listing the hundred and forty cuts owned by the American office, many which are very old.

The plumbers and engineers changed the steampipes running to the kitchen and pump and then the stew will be cooked faster and probably better.

The gardeners are expecting to have a picnic some of these good days when they have rid the fruit trees of the insects which are eating the leaves badly.

The tailors are making favorable progress in their department. A better understanding of garment construction is being manifested in the finished products that was wanting two months ago.

We are pleased to note that the designing and cutting of all trousers is now executed by an advanced student Philip Sorhan who displays a remarkable aptitude for this executive branch of merchant tailoring.
