The last of our year's supply of coal reached us this week, nine carloads coming on one train. Six or eight teams are hauling from daylight until dark in order to get the cars unloaded without delay.—Weekly Review.

The attitude of the student toward the literary societies should be a very important question to every one. The many young men and women who leave our schools well equipped along some lines of work, but who are unable to express themselves clearly and correctly before an audience, give proof of the importance of the work of the literary societies. He who would get the most out of his school dare not neglect this line of work. No matter what your work may be after you leave school, you shall always need your literary training. He who is perfect at ease before an audience and can think calmly and clearly in the presence of others has a power of which he may be proud.—Weekly Review.

I mean to insist that every Indian child shall have a chance of which even his parents shall not be allowed to rob him, to get the rulement of an education what we know as the common school branches!—COMMISSIONER LEUPP.—The New Era.

The department has called for proposals for the erection of a brick office building, a brick warehouse, an addition to the work shop, and a complete electric light plant for the Pierre school Bldg to be opened at the Indian Office November 4.—Weekly Review.

Rug making will be again taken up this week in the intermediate sewing department. This work always interests our visitors.—Sherman Bulletin.

A new arrangement has been made this year whereby the small girls who are too young to work on the regular detail can receive some helpful training and yet not be too closely confined. They have been formed into a special primary class under Miss Toruga, who gives them careful instruction for a short period in plain sewing preparatory to the sampler work done by those in the regular primary class. These little tots, intent over their stitches, are an interesting sight.—Sherman Bulletin.

Official announcement is made by Miss Estelle Reel, National Superintendent of Indian schools, that the national institute for all employes in the Indian service will take place in Spokane next August, when delegates from all over the United States will be in attendance. The sessions will be under the personal supervision of Miss Reel, who originated the institute plan for Indian school teachers. The work follows much along the lines of the national education association's institute, except that the key note is to turn the Indian's thought toward civilization.—Lincoln Journal.
