New Structure At Chemawa

An Elegant and Commodious Brick Hospital.

The accompanying cut is from a picture of the latest building at the Salem United States Indian Training school, located just north of the city on the Southern Pacific railroad and the new Oregon Electric line. It is a hospital, and one of the handsomest and best arranged in the Indian service in the whole United States. The building has just been completed by F. A. Erixon, the well-known Salem contractor. It was done on time. This fact is mentioned, because it is a somewhat unusual thing to see buildings completed on time. It was a work of considerable magnitude, including a sewer system, water system, and an electric light line working from the power house.

The building is of brick, with a concrete foundation. The main building is two stories high. The two wings are one story. There is a basement under the main building, in which is the steam heating plant. The plumbing of the building is very elaborate; better, perhaps than that contained in other buildings on the grounds. The building is well constructed throughout. It has splendid fir floors; made of two and a half inch flooring instead of the usual four inch. The new structure not only adds to the beauty of the group of fine buildings on the grounds of this institution, but it also fills a very needful place in the conveniences and equipment of the great institution—the only school in the northwest for the higher education of the Indian, and one of the four leading ones in the United States.—Salem Statesman.

Harry Jones did some fine playing in last Saturday's football game, but his team was defeated.

Eugene Williams, the manager of the of the Chemawa Y. M. C. A. basketball team, is working hard getting games scheduled. So far he has a game for the first team every Saturday from now until February 8th. Then the team will have a rest for a while.

The blacksmiths and engineers will play their annual game of football for the championship of Chemawa and an oyster supper next Saturday afternoon. Every body invited to the game.—H. E. Mann.
