

and is the mother of seven children, two boys and five girls, Gertrude, the oldest daughter, being a graduate of the school and a highly accomplished young lady. Two of the children, Ernest and Ella, are at present students of Willamette University in this city and the other four are students at Chemawa.

Captain Brewer, as the students were wont to refer to him, was one of the most highly educated Indians in the government employ and had at his command nearly all the native Indians' dialects. He believed that in dealing out punishment for wrong-doing, the punishment should fit the crime and his penalties ranged from a mild reproof to imprisonment in the guard house, however, it was a credit to the youth of Chemawa that it could be said that the guard house was very seldom called into use. He was an enthusiastic promoter of sports and games of the school and at practice was always an interested spectator. He was custodian of the trophies won by the teams in the field and pointed with pride to those which are on display in his office.

There were from 300 to 400 boys ranging from 10 to 18 years of age constantly under his supervision, and as boys of whatever color or race are likely to have boys' natures, one might have thought that Mr. Brewer would have been at his wit's end at times, in holding them straight. But this mild-mannered man, seemed to have no difficulty in managing his department satisfactorily and it was plain to see that he ruled with love and kindness rather than by cruelty and harshness.

He took special pride in speaking at the exercises of the annual anniversary celebrations, which are held on Feb. 25th of each year, and his speeches were always looked forward to by the students as one of the best parts of the program, his words being full of tenderness, love and kindness towards the students.—Salem Statesman.

Impressive services were held at the funeral of David Brewer in the Presbyterian church on the Puyallup reservation Friday. There was a large attendance and many floral offerings, conspicuous among which was a large floral design representing a vacant chair. It was made of pink roses, violets and white carnations and was a tribute from the employes and pupils in the Indian training school, Chemawa, Ore., Mr. Brewer having been engaged in the work himself for twenty-five years.—Tacoma Daily Ledger.
