CUTTING TABLE CLIPPINGS.

Duties of a tailor's apprentice at Chemawa and deportment necessary in the tailor shop:

Your duty to your instructor requires you to treat him with respect.

To conform to the established rules and usages of the shop—

To do your work the best you know how with both head and hand. To show a disposition to learn by being attentive, industrious and respectful.

By being respectful to your shopmate and considerate of his rights and privileges you invite his respect for yourself and obtain it by your right conduct.

If you are working at the cutting table and a student is turned over to you to measure for school or uniform clothes, do not consider it a joke. You are being prepared to fill the position of a cutter—a very profitable position in the tailoring world.

To be punctual is the rule of kings. Be on time. When the whistle blows to begin work hurry to your shop and immediately commence work—time lost in useless preparation cannot be gained or the loss overcome.

When you enter your shop, do so quietly; and when you leave it, do so quietly. It indicates good breeding and careful training and who among our promising boys does not wish to appear to be a young man of good manners?

Under no consideration whatever should you wear your hat in the house or under cover. Remove it. By doing so you immediately proclaim through your conduct that you are civilized. By not doing so leaves the question in doubt.

Exhibit work is being prepared in the different class rooms.

Mr. Campbell visited the school rooms during the week.
